This is the first opening at the place for thirteen years, as that many years ago it was quite a lively place, but it shut down at that time and has remained so ever since, but with the work now being done by the Nevada-Utah mining Co., evidences of prosperity arises in the opening of business places.

GENERAL MANAGER A. F. SCHNEIDER.

Mr. A. F. Schneider, General Manager of the Nevada-Utah Mines and Smelters Corporation arrived Monday night, and has been quite busy looking into the work that has been accomplished here, and also laying out the campaign and work for the future. So far as we can learn it is the intention to push all work with the utmost dispatch looking toward the best results at all times.

The timbering of the No. 1 and No. 5 shafts have begun and night and day shifts are employed. The timber for both shafts has all arrived at Modena, and is being freighted in as rapidly as B. J. Lund & Co. can secure teams.

The railroad is in good working order and trips are made about four times a week to Royal City where the great Day mine is situated. Preparations are being made there for the sinking of a new shaft to be used as the main working shaft. A fine two story bunk-house has been completed that will house about 50 men very comfortably, and the ore bins and many other improvements are under way. The company now have about 100 men on the pay roll.

Night Prowlers.

There are a few night prowlers around. Monday night a couple visited the Smelter at the lower end of town, and the night watchman called on them to halt, when they took to their heels. The watchman took a couple of shots at them, but as it was dark his aim failed to connect.

On Tuesday night about 10 o'clock a couple tried to force an entrance to Mrs. Garrison's residence on Lacour street. They were very bold in their operations as Deputy Sheriff Ewing and Frendenthal were working in the Sheriff's office which is next door to Mrs. Garrison's residence and the light from the window shown on the side of the building where the door was that they tried to force. Mrs. Garrison woke her two sons, who ran over to the office, and notified the officers who immediately made a hunt for the offenders. The saloons were visited and all the back streets thoroughly searched but no trace was found. With such bold characters in our midst it is well to see that your doors are securely looked before retiring.

Bristol.

Pat Christian was in from Bristol Sunday and Monday. He says that the mines upon which he and others have a lease, being the property of Bristol Copper Mining Company are looking exceptionally well. They have a good lot of ore out ready for shipment, and have kept all teams supplied with ore as fast as they could show up. He says that they cannot get teams enough to freight out the quantity of ore they have and can supply. About sixty-five teams were loaded during the month of February as that is about the number that arrived with freight from Modena for this place. This is indeed most encouraging and speaks well for the old camp of Bristol.

The Pioche Brass Band is preparing to give a musical concert and a short laughable "skit" entitled 'Freezing A Mother-in-law,' on the 16th of March. JUDGE HENRY RIVES DEAD.

Judge Henry Rives, the well-known Salt Lake attorney, died at St. Mark's hospital last Wednesday the 21st. Judge Rives had been in failing health for several months, and within the last few weeks was taken to the hospital, where for a number of days his death has been expected. Judge Rives was a widower but is survived by three children, the widow of the late Dr. W. T. Dalby and two other younger children now in California with relatives.

Judge Rives came to Salt Lake from Nevada, where for many years he had been prominent both as a practicing attorney and as a Judge on the bench. He went to Nevada from Virginia in 1870 and studied law under Judge A. C. Ellis of Salt Lake City. For twelve years he was Judge of the Sixth district of the State, living here. He was attorney for the famous Raymond & Ely mine at that place in its palmist days. His father was a Colonel in the Confederate army and was killed in the service. He was also a relative of Amelia Rives, author of "The Quick and the Dead."

Judge Rives was a gentleman of the old school and of the Southern type; courteous and polite under all conditions and circumstances. His air of deference to courts and fellow members of the bar was another striking characteristic. He possessed unusual ability and was considered authority in all phases of mining law.

Judge C. C. Goodwin in the Salt Lake Telegram pays this tribute.

The death of Judge Rives is most sorrowful, in the sense that an acute and cultivated mind has gone into the shadows, that a naturally high and brave soul has taken its flight. On the other hand there is a sense of relief that one who has been so long a sufferer that life had become a burden has found rest.

Judge Rives was of the best stock of the south; he had all the accomplishments of the schools, he was a trained lawyer, an able judge. When in his youth the war came he fought it through; he had a wonderful faculty of drawing to himself friends; he was one of the most genial of men; he had the face and bearing of a thoroughbred; he loved his friends; he wanted to be on good terms with all the world; his weaknesses were those of a genial nature, and he never had an enemy half so cruel to him as he was to himself. He has been failing in health for several years; for a year past his decline has been most marked, and his infirmities progressed, until at last he looked upon approaching death as upon a welcome friend that would bring to him a curse of sorrow and pain. He came from the battle fields of the East to the battle fields for fortunes in the deserts of the West. He served for two terms, if we remember correctly, on the district bench of Nevada; he came here as the attorney for the De Lamar company some twelve years ago, and this has been his home since. He has many friends here, a great host of friends in Nevada, but of late years he has passed through that most sorrowful period of a proud man's life, wherein the admiration of friends turns at length into pity, and he has had to walk around for years, and feel that pity when he looked in familiar faces, and knew that for his own sake those friends would feel a relief when they knew that his battle of life was over.
